RESCHEDULING OF 2EA PROGRAMMES

PREAMBLE

The rationale behind the rescheduling, which took into account the requirement to give at least 1 hour to each language group in prime time, is based on a combination of community-size and needs. The gamut of needs extends from the field of information to that of culture.

The size of a community is expressed in percentages.

The percentages are based on the total number of overseas-born Australian residents from non-English speaking countries (updated figures from the 1976 census).

Lack of statistical information (from the Bureau of Census and Statistics) in relation to the first language spoken at home has often prevented SEBAC from ascertaining with accuracy the original "nationality". In a number of countries, for example, large communities, though locally born, had a different "nationality". With other groups, such as the Assyrians and Armenians, there is no original "country" to speak of. With regards to the Jewish group, they could only be identified according to religion.

All in all, on the basis of the available statistical data, it is impossible to present an accurate picture of the ethnic background of the Australian population.

The Arabic group is considered monolingual but is multicultural as well as multinational. The same applies to the French group. As to the groups from Yugoslavia, there are no official records giving the breakdown of the four ethnic groups making up what was previously known as the "Yugoslav" contingent.

Although all European languages are covered (except for Albanian and Bulgarian), with regard to Asia the picture is somewhat different: there is a very large number of Malaysians (12,075), for example, apparently uncatered for. Another 11 Asian groups are also completely ignored, unless they follow other existing programmes. The largest among them, after the Malaysian, is constituted by Indonesians (4063). There exist a few pockets of Africans (4134), apart from South Africa, not catered for.

In any event, the rescheduling has demonstrated, without a shade of doubt, that it is impossible to satisfy the legitimate aspiration of the various communities to go on air when it is possible for their listeners to tune in.

In an effort to comply with the request to give every group at least one hour, and this had to be during prime time, the large groups such as the Italians, the Greeks, the Arabs, the Germans etc, are no longer in a position to broadcast at the same time across the board. Their days and times are disjointed. This, it is feared, will cause strong reactions. These groups will feel dispossessed since they had learnt to depend on a fixed time of day across the board. The type of service which they will now receive will be considered inferior even if it will consist of all original hours.

Only a second frequency will make it possible to rectify the situation and provide air-time, on an equitable basis, for all those who are urgently asking for an extension of their present time allocation. (May SESAC ask, incidentally, what will happen to the present frequency when 2EA is allocated the new one in June this year?)

One more point of a general nature: SESAC was forced to upset so considerably the "historic" pattern of broadcasting times that, in order for coordinators to maintain some semblance of the same service to their respective communities (we are speaking especially of the major language groups), these changes cannot be implemented until programmes go all original. If rescheduling does not go together with all-original programmes, the largest proportion of the listening audience will feel it has been cheated.

We cannot stress enough that SESAC consider this question very carefully. Since the small groups have been satisfied at the expense of the large ones, this ought at least to be compensated by the introduction of all original hours.

EXPLANATORY NOTES

A number of points were raised during the debate on the preceding table, and SESAC wishes to underline them for the benefit of the S.B.S. :

- a) In the Arabic group the number of Lebanese exceeded any other by far. It is almost three times that of the Egyptians. In accordance with a previous recommendation, SESAC expects that the coordinator be sided by a cultural advisor and that provisions be made so that the proportioned "Lebanese" programmes are presented according to Lebanese idiomatic usage.
- b) In the case of the previously defined "Yugoslav" groups, no Australian statistics are available. It would seem as if the figures cited could be correct in relation to the four language-cultural groupings.
- bl) In the case of the Turks, quite apart from historic reasons, though their number is not excessively large, the element of need (both culturally and in the field of information) is rather marked.
- c) The Vietnamese were considered to be the most needy at the present time. The hours allocated to them take also into account the expected arrival of more Vietnamese.
- e) The Arabic groups would have claim to a greater number of hours but it was felt the jump was already rather big, and they would probably require a little time to make the necessary adjustments production wise. More hours would have to be allocated to them eventually.
- f) Concern was also expressed for languages which are not spoken in any specific country (i.e. Assyrian), or cultures which are existent in politically restricted countries (i.e. Ukrainian), or scattered populations (i.e. Armenian).
- g) Programmes in other languages are going to be required in the immediate future to satisfy groups (see next page) which are at this moment totally uncatered for.
- h) Swiss residents (approximately 2,600) were considered to be serviced by broadcasts in German (mainly), in French and in Italian. It was however felt some programmes in English, or even in the respective languages, might be occasionally produced with Switzerland as the theme.
